Supported Employment can play a critical role in improving quality of life and mental health outcomes as part of a person's recovery journey.

The goal of the supported employment program will be to assist individuals with serious mental illness in discovering paths of self-sufficiency and recovery rather than disability and dependence.

Any individual that determines that employment is a goal will be referred to the Employment Specialist. The Employment Specialist will engage in job development, reaching out to employers in the community and making contacts to help clients find competitive employment that is consistent with their goals and preferences.

Supported employment services focus on achieving outcomes by matching individuals to jobs best suited for their skills, strengths, interests, and capacities, and by providing continuous support during employment. Every person who wants to work will be eligible with the goal being to provide them with a competitive job.
